My opinion:

4imprint really works great; they have an art department that can help you get most graphics into a format suitable to be put on the merchandise they sell. We used them to make koozies that we gave to our wedding reception guests; everyone loved them and we frequently still see friends using them when we're out with them. A gift that keeps giving! Of course our friends like to drink so that may play a role into whether a koozie is a good idea. Here's some pics; I can probably dig up the photoshop file for you of the King & Queen of hearts if you are interested in using it on any items you're going to have made; it took a while formatting it down to a size that would fit on a koozie and still be recognizable in black and white. I'll include the black and white jpeg versions of it and another design I did below in case you want to use them; not good for editing though since they're jpeg format.

Here's how they looked on the tables at our venue with the playing cards we also gave stuffed inside:
